When William H. Sewell became chair in 1960, he established a guiding principle of “decency, excellence, and diversity” that the department still aims toward today. After he passed away in June 2001, we established an annual lecture to honor his memory.