Office hours: by appointment, please email me
Email: gseidman@wisc.edu

This class surveys classic and contemporary debates in the sociology of economic change and development, with an emphasis on exploring the theoretical assumptions underlying different perspectives.

Please don't be put off by the length of the syllabus! Each week, we will focus on a different approach or issue 'development', and our discussion will cover both classic readings and critiques. Participants who have not yet read the classics will probably want to focus readings on the classical works, while those who are familiar with that work may want to read some critiques or additional research based on that approach, to enrich their understanding.

Until we can meet in person, we will meet on zoom, using the link that I have posted on the course Canvas page,

Course Requirements:

Seminar participants will be expected to write either a research paper (20-25 pages) or a literature review (15-20 pages) focusing on a topic or debate within the field. Students will also briefly present their final paper on the final day of class.

In-class presentations

This course is designed to contribute to achieving the following instructional objectives designated as priorities by the Department of sociology:

- Students will demonstrate a broad understanding of major theories, methodologies, and research findings in the sociological literature.
- Students will develop analytical thinking skills that enable them to evaluate information pertinent to their research question.
- Students will communicate in a clear, organized engaging manner, using language, methods, and critical tools appropriate to the social sciences.

Departmental notice of grievance and appeal rights. The Department of Sociology regularly conducts student evaluations of all professors near the end of the semester. Students who have more immediate concerns about this course should report them to the instructor or to the chair, 8128 Social Science (cschwartz@ssc.wisc.edu) .
